From Australia to USA to China primary school children are doing homework. This homework covers English, Maths and Spelling. But the question is: Should they do it? I will start with reasons why they should do homework.

Firstly, if children do homework in primary school it will prepare them for high school. If children start doing homework when they are young it will make sure they are ready for the harder work to come.

Secondly, if children are doing homework they will learn more. When children are doing their homework they are revising what they have done at school, therefore educating them.

Lastly, if children are doing homework they won’t get bored. If there is nothing to do at home and there is no homework what are kids going to do? In addition, if there is no homework they will watch TV, play computer games, etc. which is very bad for them.

Every child has to get out their homework and working pen and mark which takes up time which could be used for learning. Also, teachers will have to mark which takes up their own time.

In addition, if children are working they are wasting their free time. Instead of doing homework, children could be playing, exercising, and most importantly, spending time with their friends and family.

Finally, children will get frustrated. If children get too much homework, they will get annoyed and not want to do it again.

In conclusion, children should do homework for their education and will prepare them for high school and their future.

Grade Commentary

Dale has demonstrated sound knowledge and understanding of the content and text type. Valid reasoning has been demonstrated but further justification is required. Sentence beginnings have been varied but the language is a little repetitive. Time connectives have been appropriately used and an adequate level of competence is evident in the editing and spelling.

Dale’s response demonstrates characteristics of work typically produced by a student performing at a grade C standard.
